

Messrs Walpole, Darlington and Paterson, the contractors for the new premises for the Bank of Australasia, are making splendid progress with their work and should have the building completed well within the contract time. The building work has been carried out latterly with such despatch that one can now form some idea of what its ultimate appearance will be like. The framework and sides are completed and the roof is ready to receive the Marseilles tiles, with which it will be covered. This will be the first building in the district in which these tiles have been used.
